DIXONS - THE STORY SO FAR

The firm of J. Dixon and Son was founded in 1882 at 23 Queen Street, Whitehaven, by the late Mr Joseph Dixon. In 1895 the business moved location to 7, Lowther Street which was a dwelling house converted into a shop and was one of the first shops in the town to be lit by electricity. For some time the basement and ground floor were the business premises and the family lived upstairs.

In the early 1900s a considerable amount of high-class furniture was produced. Around 16 cabinet makers, upholsterers and French polishers were employed to do specialist work for large houses in the Lake District.

Mr J. Dixon was well known as an expert in decorations. During the First World War the King and Queen visited the Workington iron and steel company and the firm were engaged to decorate and furnish the rooms used by the Royal Party.

In 1923, 8 Lowther Street, the house next door to the shop, was acquired, where new shop fronts were installed. A branch also opened at Murray Road, Workington. Within two years three buildings were occupied and used as large a store.

During the 1950s shop alterations were made in the Whitehaven branch and a new store opened on Oxford Street, Workington, in 1956. It was at this time that the firm became a private limited company, entirely owned by the Dixon family.

In 1962 a branch was opened in a shopping centre in Kendal at 85 Highgate, recognised as a centre for high-class furnishings. The firm advanced to acquiring Edinburgh House, Lowther Street, Carlisle. This was the largest furnishing store and showroom in the county at that time.

In the 1970s 8 shops next to the Whitehaven store were bought. The whole site was demolished and a new modern department store was built, with an emphasis on fashion, menswear, cosmetics, furniture and homewares.

In the 1980s the site of the Cumberland Cloth Company on Maryport Road, Workington was acquired, and mainly demolished to make way for Dunmail Park, which opened in September 1988.

The first enclosed out of town shopping centre in Cumbria, in the 1990s Dunmail Park was extended with 6 more shops, a car showroom and petrol station.

The company's Millennium Project was to extend Dunmail Park further with 6 cinemas, 4 extra shops and a fast food outlet.

The floods of 2009 badly affected Dunmail Park, when it was cut off from Workington by the collapse and closure of bridges. The main store was leased to Asda, and Dixons moved its present site in the former car showroom.

The new Terrace Cafe is the latest example of Dixons ongoing investment in West Cumbria and our commitment to offer local jobs to local people and outstanding customer service.

Dixons is still owned by the Dixon family, with contributions from the third, fourth and fifth generations. Dixons maintains a strong emphasis on furniture, carpets and homewares - continuing the tradition of service and value offered by Joseph Dixon in 1882, when he designed and made furniture to order in his Whitehaven workshop.
